KAGE NO CHIKAI 2 — THE SHADOW'S VOW

Walk all of Japan. Draw your blade on any road. Keep the vow.

An open-world pixel-art samurai game that unites Bright Spirit's exploration with Kage no Chikai's arrow-parry duels. Built solo, entirely from code, by Kei Cheong Mai.

EXPLORATION × DUELS

Exploration or combat? I stopped choosing.

You are Kage, the body double of Lord Satō. Kill the Eight Eagles and Shōgun Iki to free your family. Then a secret map opens up eight clans and the sea shrines, and the fight to unite Japan begins.

Anyone on any road can be talked to, traded with or challenged to a duel. Swipe along the foe's arrow to parry.

DEVELOPMENT CHALLENGES

How I built a country from code

01 · Drawing Japan

A 640×640-tile procedural archipelago with rivers, Lake Biwa, snow country and volcanic Satsuma. 30 provinces, each with a capital, a shrine and villages, linked by roads.

02 · Smooth on any phone

A chunk-cached renderer, a pixel canvas plus a crisp UI overlay, and an automatic Lite mode for slow devices.

03 · Two games, one hand

Input changes modes with the scene: a floating joystick in the world, eight-direction swipes in a duel. On PC the arrow keys do the swipe.

04 · Iaidō, accurately

I hold 1st Dan in iaidō. The twelve ZNKR Seitei Iai kata are scripted as pixel choreography, each ending in chiburi and a four-beat nōtō.

05 · A story you can break

Story characters can be killed out of order. 40 quest steps track who is alive and branch to early endings and alternate betrayals.

06 · Music with no samples

A Python composer synthesises shakuhachi, koto, shamisen, taiko and more, producing 57 tracks that stream through a custom WebView shell with Range support.
